CFP Leeds IMC, July 1-4 2019:

“Law and Legal Culture in Anglo-Saxon England’: Old English law and its developments/reflections from the 7th century through the Conquest”

The last several decades have seen numerous developments in the study of Anglo-Saxon law and legal culture across the whole of the Old English period. Medievalists from across many disciplines have come together to produce work that has improved our understanding of government and administration in the period, and Anglo-Saxon legal culture is now a vibrant and growing field. Following the fruitful sessions on Law and Legal Culture in Anglo-Saxon England at the Kalamazoo ICMS in recent years, this session seeks to continue that work and the dialogue on this dynamic topic. We are eager to receive submissions representing a variety of perspectives, methodologies, and disciplines on any aspect of Anglo-Saxon legal culture as it developed from the seventh century through the immediate aftereffects of the Conquest.

Topics may include, but are not limited to:
Royal legislation, power and authority
Translation
Reception
Manuscripts
Governance and administration
Diplomatics
Law and the church
Anglo-Saxon Law and Continental antecedents
Use and Re-use
Laws in literature and/or material culture

Please submit 250 word proposals, brief biographical synopsis and personal information to Chelsea Shields-Más and Courtnay Konshuh by Sept 17th at:
ckonshuh@stmcollege.ca and shieldsmasc@oldwestbury.edu